FOREWORD

MODERN LANGUAGE NOTES was founded fifty years ago by A. Marshall Elliott. His purpose, as expressed in January, 1886, was to give the journal "as scientific a character as possible, considering the present status of modern language study in America." From the beginning he published, in the fields of English, German, and the Romance languages, learned articles and reviews of important books, but for some years he included reviews of text-books, personal notes, and other material of ephemeral interest in order to answer the needs of the day. For seventeen years he had the magazine printed, as Marden expressed it, "in a shed in the back yard of his residence, while the editing and most of the folding, sewing, wrapping and addressing was done in his library." As time went on, as the list of subscribers increased, and as the number of productive scholars in the country grew, the editors were able to secure the services of commercial printers and to confine their publications almost exclusively to contributions to knowledge in the form of short articles or of reviews. Since Elliott's death in 1910, the editors-in-chief have been: C. C. Marden (1911-1915), J. W. Bright (1916-1925), Edwin Greenlaw (1926-1927), and H. C. Lancaster (1928 to the present). The complete list of associate editors or co-editors is: J. W. Bright (1886-1915), H. A. Todd (1886-1900), Julius Goebel (1886-1889), H. C. G. von Jagemann (1890-1898), H. K. Schilling (1899-1901), Hermann Collitz (1902-1913), E. C. Armstrong (1911-1915), B. J. Vos (1914-1915), William Kurrelmeyer (1916 to the present), M. P. Brush (1916-1918), J. E. Shaw (1916-1917), Gustav Gruenbaum (1917 to the present), H. C. Lancaster (1919-1927), R. D. Havens (1928 to the present), and, from 1930 to the present, Kemp Malone, Hazelton Spencer, and José Robles. There have also been, besides those who subsequently became co-editors, the following advisory editors: D. S. Blondheim, G. Chinard, E. Feise, Grace Frank, J. C. French, Edwin Greenlaw, R. B. Roulston, and L. P. Shanks. These and many other specialists have generously assisted the editors when called upon to do so.

J. W. Bright, who, in 1916, gave the journal its present form, perceived that the need for a general index was becoming greater and greater as the annual volumes multiplied. He requested E. P.

Kuhl to undertake the work of compilation. This the latter did and prepared most of the slips required by Volumes I-XXX. Subsequently R. A. Parker covered five or six volumes. Then H. H. Shapiro completed the compilation, revised the material collected by his predecessors, classified and alphabetized some 19,000 slips, and saw the resulting volume through the press. In reading proof he was aided by the editors and by four graduate students, Engel, Fosson, Roubey, and Starr.

It was originally intended that the general index should be made after the manner of the annual indices, that is, that it should be based merely on the titles of the items that had appeared in the journal and on the names of the authors concerned, all arranged in one alphabetical list. It seemed to the editors, however, that, where there was so large an amount of material, another method would produce better results, especially as titles are often non-committal as to the nature of the articles they head. The items have accordingly been divided into three categories. The first of these, entitled Subjects, is the one that will probably be most frequently consulted. It includes, not only the linguistic and literary material that is not associated with any single personality, but all authors and books that are the objects of comment, Dante and Grim the Collier as well as German Dialects and Old French. No attempt has been made, however, to analyze the articles, for to have included all of the names and topics mentioned in them would have vastly increased the labor and would have produced a volume too bulky to be as serviceable as one conceived on a less comprehensive plan. The list as printed does, however, give an idea of the main objects of research in the minds of those who have contributed to Modern Language Notes. As scholars are sometimes accused of concerning themselves primarily with minor authors, it may be of interest to note that the seven writers who have received the largest amount of space in the subject-index are, in order, Shakespeare, Chaucer, Goethe, Milton, Spenser, Dante, and Voltaire.

In the second division of the index will be found the names of those who have contributed articles to the journal or whose books have been reviewed in its pages. Along with their names are given the titles of their articles and books. In the third division are similarly listed the authors of reviews. The names of many prominent scholars will be found both in the second and in the third division. With the exception of the death-notices, the personal notes have been excluded, as well as references to publications mentioned by title only, unless the fact that such titles were noted at a given time seemed to have some interest for scholarship.

The editors wish to thank all those who have had a hand in this undertaking. They would make special mention of the Rockefeller Fund for Research in the Humanities, contributed to The Johns Hopkins University, a gift that has made possible the preparation of the index for publication; the J. H. Furst Co., which, by printing the November and December numbers of the current year six months before they were issued, enabled the editor of the index to complete his work before the end of 1935; and the more than three hundred subscribers to the index, whose cordial coöperation has met the cost of publication. It is hoped that in return this index will bring to light many a valuable note and that it will serve to illustrate the interests of organized modern language scholarship during the first half-century of its existence in the United States.
